Australian company wins UN leadership training contract

The United Nations headquarters in New York has awarded Australian company, Pacific Consulting, the contract to provide leadership training to the Global Emergency Response Management Team.

Participants from 12 nations will undertake the leadership training in Amman, Jordan in October 2009.

Pacific Consulting's Director, Ross McLelland, said, "We believe this is the first time an Australian consulting firm has been awarded a UN leadership contract for its staff."

"Pacific Consulting will be conducting leadership profile assessments using the Belbin Team Styles profiles," Mr McLelland said.

Mr McLelland will be facilitating the workshops and reporting on key conclusions to New York and advising on further development needs for participants.

Pacific Consulting is a privately owned management consultancy specialising in the field of organisation improvement that focuses on improving executive and staff performance.
